OF THE

now at once. She gives no reason and makes no apology. She only says she must go; and she says this as if she had been offended and was beating a retreat in consequence. But if there are graces to the fore—if titles abound and a young prince or no is thrown in—she expands into civility, and becomes as loquacious as in an ordinary conversation.

life as amiable as here she has been morose. Life to her means artificial exaltation; and the intrinsic worth of heart or brain has no claim on her consideration. She is the product of a fast corrupting civilisation, where form is everything and humanity nothing; and she will have to do, out with the circumstances to which she owes her birth. As a Jioness she is about the most unsatisfactory of a not very satisfactory race, and her womanhood is less lovely than her lionhood. But she is of the very other thority blind to whom fate and fortune, for reasons of their own, have denied the gift of self-knowledge; so that when she poses for a Queen of Beasts she does not know that her long ears betray her. And, again, there are lionesses who are never anything but simple, sweet, and graceful women—creatures whose vocation you forget in your admiration of their personality. graceful Lily women, gentle wives and devoted as mothers, whose works you do not remember for joy in her ways: bright and are caressed like favourite poodles rather than feared as majestic lionesses; frank and homely women who will talk of drees or puddings, and not elp in a hard word nor an allusion to their own works—and so on through the whole cycle of charming, natural, and unspoiled persons. For whose sake we forgive the Snazley Yows and the stuck-up incidences—the affected little sylphs and the rude hoble-dehoy—the worshippers of rask and con-mistakes made by lions and lionesses in their own persons and in their dealings with the persons of others.—Queen.
